Champ Clark. He proposes to do some reading out of the party on his own hook, if it becomes necessary; and gentlemen with the thought of next year's primaries in their minds are werried about the effect of being denounced as traitors by the party leader, for bolting the Denver platform on one of its most important propositions.

President Taft has been trying, it is understood, to effect an arrangement by which all Republican factions might finally get together on a plan of adjustment. The first plan tried out looked to appointing a Committee on Revision of the Rules, to report in December next, the old rules to be retained for the extraordinary session. That did not please the insurgents, and in their caucus Thursday night they amended it to provide that this committee should not only be a committee on revision of not only be a committee on revision of rules, but should also act as Committoe on Rules during the extra session:
should consist of fifteen members, and should be made up of six democrats, four insurgent, and five regular Republicans. That would give the regular Republicans a minority.

Offered to Compromise.

On this basis the insurgents were willing to compromise; but the Cannon forces scouted it. Then yesterday the President held a long conference with Senator Cummins and Representatives Good, Woods, Kendall and Pickett, four new House members from Iowa, who have been holding the apparent balance of power thus far. They have wanted to insurge within polite limitation, but they have also wanted to be in the good graces of the Administration. It was a proceeding requiring some dex-terity and agility.

As a result of the uncertainty of these As a result of the uncertainty of these four Iowans, the Thursday evening caucus of insurgents made its pronouncement muc; more mild than it would otherwise have been. It was esteemed necessary to fix up a program on which this quartet would act with the rest of the insurgents. No one of the four attended the insurgent caucus; Mr. Hubbard of Iowa, a dyed-in-the-wool insurgent, spoke for them and pledged them to the program of a committee of fifteen on rules and revision of rules, and per force, to hold them, the caucus agreed to that.

But yesterday there was still protest from insurgents, and postponement to December did not look good. It was made plain during the day that insurgents and regulars could not be forced to act together and eliminate the Democrats, unless more than this were conceded to the insurgents. So last evening Senator Cummins took his followers to the stories about the revision of the rules, to be reported next. This would in effect leave the Cannon organization and rules in force during the extraordinary session, with the cannon organization and rules in force during the extraordinary session, with the cannon of the long session. On this proposition it is stated President Taft is agreed. He is as anxious as anybody for some reform of the House rules, to the Cannon of the Cannon of the Pluse, and then acted upon.

This would in effect leave the Cannon organization and rules in force during the extraordinary session, with the cannon organization and rules in force during the cannon of the four attended the cannon organization and rules in force during the cannon organization and rules in force during the heavily on the cannon organization and rules in force during the cannon organization and rules in force

Attorney General Byers has been for many years a close political lieutenant of Senator Cummins. His telegram to the Senator is regarded as extremely significant of political sentiment in lowa, and likely to wrench away from the organization, the last hope of using the lowa members as a leverage to force a compromise out of the insurgents. The circulation of Attorney General Byer's telegram today caused insurgent stock to rise about 50 per

The State Department has received no dispatches confirming the report of a naval engagement between the gunboats Presidente of Salvador and Momotombo of Nicaragua. If it did occur, it could not have been more than a pop-gun battle, as both vessels have only four smail guns between them.
The Presidente is the old Empire, a wooden craft sailing out of Portlard years ago in the lumber trade.

She was later fitted out for a fill-bustering expedition from San Fran-cisco, manned by Americans, and captured by an American warship. Since that event, which occurred long since, she has gone through various vicissitudes of fortune in Central American waters. It is said that she is manned by an American crew.

Momotomio, the Nicaragus i "navy," is a steel vessel with two snall Krupp guns. As she has no watert,ght compartments, a shot below the waterline would sink her like a tin kettle. The chances favor the Presidente, because she is built of wood.
